Even on a random weeknigt, its packed, and for good reason. The vibe is electric, the outdoor seating is adorable (complete with heat lamps), and the menu is refreshingly different from your typical Italian spot. Lets talk food. Im usually not drawn to Italian unless theres a Caesar salad, and this one completely delivered perfectly dressed with a generous amount of anchovies and topped with one of the best grilled salmon fillets Ive ever had. Flaky, flavorful, and done just right. We started with their pillow focaccia, which is a must, and then made our way through a spread that had something for everyone. The girls shared a pink sauce pasta with a side of steak (gone in minutes) and a simple butter pasta that hit the spot. My husband built his own pizza no sausage, but added mushrooms, black truffle, and burrata and it was outstanding. The crust is ultra-thin, just like in Italy, and when paired with their house chili oil, its game over. If youre craving classic pesto or a creamy white sauce, this isnt your spot but if youre up for fresh, chef-driven Italian with a twist, Angelinas is where you want to be. And the cocktails? While theres no formal cocktail program, they have some of the best bartenders around. These are the kinds of people who know their spirits, craft with intention, and surprise you with every pour. Theyre the ones who introduced me to Monkey 47 and serve one of the best Last Words (yes, with Green Chartreuse) Ive ever had. Then theres Luca, our incredible server from Tuscany. His warmth and honesty made the night even better. Im super picky, and he didnt just recommend dishes he described exactly what to expect and made sure everything was spot-on. His care elevated the whole experience. We ended the night on a high note with their cheescake rich yet light, with a granah cracker crust and a hint of lemon zest that brought the perfect brightness to each bite. Angelinas has officially won us over. Great food, thoughtful service, standout cocktails, and a vibe that keeps pulling you back. Well definitely be back soon.
