You should also provide volunteering or internship positions in this section. It is no longer considered appropriate to include personal information such as marital status, religion, age or ethnicity. Next should be some form of introduction, career objective or personal statement. Whether it is advanced computer skills, team-building, written or verbal communication, or problem solving skills make sure they relate to the job you are pursuing. Instead of writing "I increased sales during this time", say how much you increased sales by - "I increased sales by 17% during this time". For electronic versions, sans-serif styles make for easier reading - Arial, Helvetica and Calibri are popular sans serif fonts. Font size is also important. White space can increase readability, and keeping the recruiter reading is your main goal. Check spelling, grammar and formatting. If positioned at the top of the first page, it'll be the first thing that employers read and, if worded attractively, will entice them to keep reading. This does not need a title and is where you state your full name and contact details including address, telephone number(s) and email address(es). It is becoming increasingly common to only include the town and country in the address, however, you may also include your full postal address if you prefer. 11 or 12 point font is the most popular, however, it may be appropriate to increase or decrease slightly in certain situations. Unfortunately, there is no one-size-fits-all as you will want to highlight different experiences and skills for each particular role you apply for. It is easier to update your latest achievements, certificates and training as they occur, rather than scramble to remember what you did and when if you find yourself applying for a position. It's not ok to lie or exaggerate on your CV. For a highly-skilled, technical position, an additional page may be required. During the interview you will have the opportunity to elaborate on your skills and expertise. ResearchAs you should always customize your CV to the role you're pursuing, researching the role and company are key. You'll want to know in advance what the company prides itself on and the qualities needed to be successful in the position you are applying for. Don't leave large gaps in your work history. There is a lot riding on this first impression with up to 90% of CVs being rejected by recruiters in as little as 8 seconds. Understanding what recruiters are looking for in these crucial seconds will help you write a first-class CV which can help you move to the next stage of the recruitment process. It is unlikely you will fit all of the above information on just one page, so clear formatting is a must. Make sure you use a clear, easy to read font in an appropriate size. You should use this statement to focus on your best qualities and tailor it to the job you're seeking. The skills section of your CV should highlight pertinent skills that can help you excel at the job in question. Try to show, in your summary of recent employment, that you've had a positive impact in your position. If you have many years of experience in your industry, you don't have to elaborate as much on your older positions. Remember to only include information if it is relevant. FormattingThe perfect length for a CV will be argued as long as the earth turns, however, the general consensus is around two pages. If you have any doubts at all, ask someone else to check it for you too. A shorter summary of your responsibilities should be sufficient.Length and LanguageTime is precious to potential employers, so it's important to be clear, concise and keep your CV to no longer than two pages. This article will provide you with some tips to help alleviate the anxiety that comes with writing your CV and some tricks to help it stand out to potential employers. Personal StatementEquipping your CV with a personal statement will help it stand out to employers. If you are printing your CV, serif style fonts are the clearest and easiest to read - Times New Roman, Georgia and Century Gothic are serif style fonts. Clearly explain, in a sentence or two, why you are the best person for this particular job, or what experience you have to offer. Work ExperienceList your work experience in reverse chronological order, starting with your most recent or current position. Spell check will not single out "from" when you really meant to say "form". CustomizeYour CV needs to be customized for each individual position you are applying for. Not only will this be helpful when writing your CV, but it will also benefit you if you land an interview. You will be found out at some stage and that could make for an embarrassing situation. MORE FROM QUESTIONSANSWERED.NET Fancy fonts look great on your personal projects but do not present a professional image in your CV. Taking time to research your prospective employer and adjusting your CV to meet their requirements will be obvious to the recruiters and may help you land an interview. Keep it Current and AccurateKeep your CV current at all times. It is always recommended to quantify any achievements if possible. Please also make sure any email address you provide is professional and appropriate. If your LinkedIn profile is accurate and up to date, you may also choose to include it in this section. You want to catch the attention of the employer so that they'll bring you in for an interview. If still currently employed, use month and year of commencement to "present" or "current". A summary of duties performed, and Any notable achievements. If necessary, check a third time. MORE FROM QUESTIONSANSWERED.NET Home » CV » Examples » Catering & culinary » Commis chef CV CC0-BY/Free-Photos/pixabay Your Curriculum Vitae (CV), or Resume, is your personal advertisement and chance to make a good first impression with a prospective employer. You should also include all the details of any additional training or study you have undertaken if it is relevant to the position. Other Sections - As Required Depending on the position you are applying for, you may consider including some or all of the following: Certificates; Licenses; Publications; Honors or Awards; Technical skills; or Other skills. It can be hard to give ourselves credit for things we have done well but don't cross the line by making things up. Then check it again. Following the below tips and advice will help you make a great first impression every time. Personal InformationThe first section of your CV should always be your personal information. It is not recommended to go below 9 point or above 14 point in the main body of your CV. Use headings, bullet points and short sentences. Each position should be listed separately and include the following information: Company name; Your position title; Duration of employment - the month and year you commenced to the month and year you finished. Show that you have good communication skills by using professional language - and always use spell-check prior to sending it forward. Job hunting alone can be a stressful process without having to worry about if your CV is written appropriately. Use language that's positive and shows that your current or most recent responsibilities can translate to the job you're pursuing. Do not be afraid of white space. Spell check is great, but there are times when you have used a correctly spelled word in the wrong place. If possible, provide a reason for any gaps, for example, travel, maternity leave or studying. Education and/or TrainingInclude the name of your University or College, graduation date and the title of your Degree(s). You have things to be proud of, point them out in a clear, non-bragging way. If you follow these tips, you can write a CV which stands out from the crowd and gets the right attention from the recruiter. Older PositionsEmployers will focus most of their attention on your most recent employment. So it's crucial to make this section as detailed as possible. Make sure you use the same margins, font and size throughout. It is unnecessary to include high school information unless you did not attend college. Another way to make this section stand out is to utilize bullet points when listing these skills to give readers a quick and focused snapshot of the skills you have to offer. Recent Employment vs.
