In other parts of the world. British Summer Sports played around the world, particularly in Australia, India, Pakistan, the West Indies and the British Isles, West India, were introduced by the colonists and cricket for the British Eastern India Company. Cricket is played with a bat and a ball and is played by two competing sides (teams) of 11 players. The square is oval in shape with a rectangular area in the middle known as the field, i.e. 22 yards (20.12 meters) long and 3.04 meters wide. Two three sets of rods called gates are placed on the ground on either side of the field. At the top of each gate are horizontal elements, called crosses. The sides alternated ball and bowling (beats); Each round is called an inning (always plural). Each game has one or two strikes, depending on which time this match is the most targeted. To forgive the ball with a straight hand, potters try to break (hit) the ball through the goal so that the hands fall off. This is one of the seven ways of rejection or expulsion. The bowling alley throws six balls in one goal (thus completing another), then another nearby player carries six balls to the opposing goal.
