Born in 1964 in the small village of Langa, Cape Town, Fassie came from a musical family and began singing early, forming her first singing group at the age of four. It was not a surprise that this song was named the Song of the Decade in 2004. The song is appreciated a lot for its incredible lyrics that can enchant a person completely from the very first words. No matter whether rich or poor people get married, this song will be played. The tragic story and the song received huge popularity and became platinum in 1989. It speaks about a poor woman who is going out during a lightning storm to fetch some water with her child. Boipatong This song is another social and political hits composed by MaBrrr to attract the attention of the audience to poor people of Boipatong, their life and death, the daily struggle they get through, and the cruelty of their everyday surroundings. After singing background vocals for other artists, Fassie broke out with the group Brenda & the Big Dudes with ... I Straight LeNdabaThis song is a hit from the times when Kwaito music trends were starting to get their tremendous popularity in South Africa. DoneÁÁÁt Follow Me IcÁÁÁm MarriedThe funny name of this hit suggests its lively nature. If not for a cardiac arrest that fell upon her in 2004, she would have offered the audience more of her appealing, emotional, frank songs about the life in her home country, the life of ordinary people and their daily struggle. Ngeke Unconfirm This song is a pure Kwaito hit with vibrant electronic sounds, a characteristic snail pace and an incredible charm of vocal chants. Still loved by many people, young and old, this track remains one of the best samples of MaBrrrÁÁÁs funk hits.
