Want to share a presentation with friends, colleagues, or the web in general, without worrying about who has installed PowerPoint or not? authorStream, a free presentation sharing site, offers the same kind of embed-anywhere utility as previously published SlideShare, but also offers the ability to download presentations as MP4 video files, putting the presentations with or without audio a step away from YouTube iPod, DVD, or any format is helpful. To work as a video, presentations must have recorded narration or proven timings added in PowerPoint, which the Digital Inspiration blog explains in detail at the following link.Share PowerPoint (PPT/PPS) and OpenOffice (ODP) presentations online with SlideShare.Read moreAuthorStream [via Digital Inspiration] When you need to create an interesting and engaging presentation for your boss, new clients, or a job interview, you have a lot of options for tools to get the job done. Also, even though it's the industry standard, you don't need Microsoft PowerPoint, and many people argue that there are better tools for work anyway. This week, we'll take a look at five of the best alternative presentation tools, based on your applications. Earlier this week, we asked you which apps you prefer to use to make presentations and presentations when PowerPoint wasn't an option. You have definitely responded, some of you passionately noticing that your favorite was better than PowerPoint anyway. We can't highlight all the candidates, but here are the top five. Create dazzling presentations for clients, business meetings or even job interviews is not possible.Read moreThe survey is closed and votes are counted. To see which PowerPoint alternative you think is the best, head to our weekly hive five follow-ups posts to verify the winner! Create an interesting, informative and stylish presentation or slideshow for a corporate meeting.Read MoreKeynote (Mac: $19.99) Apple Keynote can be purchased as a stand-alone product, or as part of Apple's iWork productivity suite, and is probably one of the most intuitive presentation applications, easy to use and heavy I've ever seen. I've never used it Many of you thought the same thing, and pointed out that it's very easy to create beautiful-looking presentations with Keynote without spending time digging through menus or looking for templates that haven't been used to death by everyone else. Keynote has great built-in graphical tools to edit and edit current images in your presentations, easily supports videos and movies on slides or as part of the presentation, has non-hokey-looking animations, supports PowerPoint documents if you need to liven up the presentation someone else, and also lets you check the presentation from your iOS device or project the presentation via video and watch notes and upcoming slides on your Mac's display.Google Docs (Web: Free) Google Docs presentation form used to be pretty clueless, clueless, have updated recently to make it more compatible with people coming from Microsoft Office, or people who want a more robust presentation tool. Google Docs offers a wide range of templates and tools for creating presentations that are easy to use and get started, slide animations and transitions to make your presentation interesting to watch, and even collaborative presentation editing with others on your team. You may miss some heavier features like embedding video in slides (although you can embed YouTube or other web videos), if you don't need the bells and whistles of a more expensive app and just want a quick, free way to create beautiful-looking presentations on any system, that's it.Google Docs has released a new version of its presentation tool with over 50 new features Read moreBeamer (LaTeX) (Windows/Mac/Linux: Free) If you're a fan of LaTeX, or you remember applying it to your thesis, you'll love Beamer. While other presentation tools give you a GUI where you can drag the items you want to use as images and videos and then edit the text boxes to include the information you want on the screen, Beamer requires you to build your presentation in a custom markup language that works for virtually any LaTeX document. If you're looking for a quick and easy-to-use system, that's not the case, but if you're already familiar with LaTeX and have used it in the past (it's very popular in academia and among technicians who prefer to write their own presentations and modify all possible features rather than give up the control of a GUI), then offer a level of granular control that other instruments do not provide.Prices (Web/Win/Mac/Linux/iOS: Free, $59/year "Enjoy", $159/year Pro) Prezi takes presentations in a different direction than static slides on a screen or projector with text on them. The animations and transitions available in other slideshow applications also pale compared to Prezi's "zooming" user interface, which sets entire slides into motion and focuses heavily on images, graphics and motion to draw attention to text. For some it's all too overwhelming and distracting from the central message of the presentation, and some have called the eye-catching presentation patterns of Prezi unprofessional, but many more have noticed that Prezi's tools make it easy to create presentations that are really interesting and a world apart from the boring presentations we're all used to. You can create an account for free and start building presentations on the web, up to a storage limit of 100MB. if you need more space, $59/year gives you a "Price Enjoy" account, 500MB and the ability to make private presentations and remove the Prezi watermark. $159/year will give you a Pro account, which takes you up to 2GB of storage space and access to Prezi Desktop, Adobe AIR app that lets you work on presentations outside of a browser.LibreOffice/OpenOffice.org Impress (Windows/Mac/Linux: Free) Without going too far into the gap between LibreOffice and OpenOffice.org, Impress Impress the presentation builder for both productivity suites. When LibreOffice split up as a fork of OpenOffice.org, it took Impress with it, and now both platforms use essentially the same tool for presentations and presentations. Both versions support PowerPoint presentations and offer an easy-to-use drag-and-drop user interface for creating new presentations that you'll be familiar with if you've used one of the other tools listed here. In fact, Impress matches PowerPoint more closely in terms of user interface and layout than any of the tools here, but extends its drawing and graphics capabilities a bit.Now that you've seen the top five, it's time to put them all to the vote and decide the winner.Honour Mentions this week go to Sliderocket, which came with only a few timid nominations to make Traditionally, creating slideshows requires the use of an app like PowerPoint and can cause various...Read moreIs your favorite not receiving enough nominations to make it into the top five? Do you have anything to say about one of the contestants we lost? Remember, the Hive Five contestants are based on your nominations in the contestant call thread at the beginning of the week. Let's hear it in the comments below.Title image remixed by Losevsky Pavel (Shutterstock). Updated: 03.06.2020 by Computer Hope Sometimes abbreviated to PP or PPT, PowerPoint is a presentation program developed by Microsoft that creates a presentation of important information, graphics and images for a presentation. It is more often used for corporate and school presentations. If you have Microsoft PowerPoint or the entire Microsoft Office package installed in Microsoft Windows, you can find PowerPoint in the Start menu. Keep in mind that new computers do not include PowerPoint. It must be purchased and installed before it can run on your computer. Tip If you don't have PowerPoint and you don't want to purchase Microsoft Office to get it, you can try using Google Slides, which is a free online presentation program similar to PowerPoint. If PowerPoint is installed on your computer, but you can't find it in the Start menu, use the following steps to launch PowerPoint manually: Open My Computer. Click or select the C: unit. If Microsoft Office is installed on a drive other than C:, select that drive. Go to the Program Files folder (x86), and then to the Microsoft Office folder. In the Microsoft Office folder, if there is a main folder, open it. Then open the OfficeXX folder, where XX is the Office version (e.g., Office16 for Microsoft Office 2016). If it is not a main folder, search and open a folder with "Office" in the name. Look for a file called POWERPNT.EXE and double click such file to start Microsoft PowerPoint. PowerPoint Example The image below is an example of how Microsoft PowerPoint looks with a description on each main area in red. PowerPoint slides can only contain text, or they can include images, videos or animated text images. Text can be formatted in the same ways as in Microsoft Word, with custom color, size and font. While the look and feel of PowerPoint has changed over the years, the functionality has remained mostly the same. Tip Microsoft PowerPoint files have the .ppt or .pptx file extension. Benefits of PowerPoint PowerPoint offers multiple benefits to users, including: It is widely used, and considered the "standard" for presentation software. If you create a PowerPoint presentation, it is more likely that it will be easier for others to open and view. It includes many optional presentation features, including slide transitions, animations, layouts, templates and more. It offers the ability to export its slides to alternative file formats, including GIF and JPG images, MPEG-4 video, PDF, RTF (rich text format), WMV (Windows Media Video), and PowerPoint XML.
