It provides an investigation into the history of the Islamic world and Islamic civilization from the moment of the prophet Mohammed to the consolidation of the Ottoman Empire. Maps and detailed commentaries identify each Islamic region in its historical context, with particular attention to the advancement of Arab developments in science, art and literature. The timelines help readers place events, people and developments in relation to each other. The cover includes pre-Islamic Arabia, the life of the prophet, rightly guided caliper, the orge of Baghdad's gold, defeating the crusades, the Persia and the Middle East, the spread of Islam, the rise of the Ottomans and of the North Africa and Granada in 13th to the 12th century. Francis Robinson explains how his perception of Islam is reflected in the book of him, Atlas of the Islamic world from 1500 (Phaidon, 1982). Why don't you do an atlas in the Islamic world? It was the voice of the siren of an editor. He was producing a series of historical and cultural atlases published by the Phaidon house of Oxford. Additional request revealed that what the publisher had in mind was not just a fifty atlas or so maps, but more a companion of Islamic civilization using 100,000 words and over 400 illustrations. The idea was challenging; A lot of persuasion was not required. But there was a problem: The space offered barely seemed to cover fourteen centuries of the history of a civilization that now embraces a fifth of the world population. We agreed that two volumes were needed, one that covered the years from the moment of the prophet Muhammad to the decline of the domain of the Mongol, and a second that he would have addressed the period from the increase of three great Muslim empires around 1500 to today. My preference and that of the publisher has dictated that we would start with the two volume. Atlas of Islam Collections on Individual Regions: Ancient and Medieval and Modern The historical atlas of Islam covers the history of the Islamic world that begins in section I with the first maps and graphs and graphs of the land of the Muslims and the Muslim, the Arabica Peninsula , Egypt and the fertile crescent, Iran and Caucasus Transossania, Anatolia and Balkans, Al-Andalus (Spain and Portugal) and Al-Maghrib, India and Indian Ocean and finally in the X section The Far East.
