The more medical-surgical questions you do, the more exposure you will have and be comfortable when you see them on the test. As you go through each option, ask yourself if this is true or false and base your decision on that. While you ultimately need to find what works for you, here are some hints that have helped me to survive two semesters of medical-surgical nursing. Read word for word. Here's how to approach and conquer those dreaded med/surg questions, which so often stump nursing students: One of the important parts of learning how to answer medical-surgical questions starts with a strong foundation of understanding the pathophysiology of the disease. One of the most important keys to being successful in medical-surgical nursing is to use your time wisely. The reason it gets a bad rap is due to the heavy client load and arduous hours. Here are some tips to help you break it down. Professors may even put more emphasis on certain concepts they want you to focus on during your lecture, which you should take as a major hint that those concepts may appear on your exam. Try and do application questions that provide rationales as to why you answered the question right or wrong. So, now that I just threw all of this information at you, don't panic! The best thing to do to strengthen your critical thinking/application skills is to do as many practice questions as you can. If airway isn't an option, then look for the answer that focuses on breathing, then circulation. Typically with the med math questions, they may throw in extra information that you don't need to solve the medication math problem. There are many different study tactics and skills that you can do to understand medical-surgical content, but being able to answer the questions correctly is another skill in its own. If the question is a priority question, the first option you would pick would be anything pertaining to the airway (administer oxygen, etc.). If you start sticking to three and your grades aren't where you'd like them to be, don't be afraid to reach your teachers, as they are here to help you succeed. Remember, it's important to find out what study hybrids work for you in Med-Surg, as everyone learns and maintains information differently. You have it! © Copyright Kaplan, Inc. Know the anatomy and physiology. Once again understanding what it looks like for anatomy and physiology (that you should have made it from your Anatomy and Physiology I and II Courses), I help you apply what you know and reducing your choices in questions. Understanding why the customer is experiencing certain things will help you see the big picture of what the question is asking. The majority of nursing students refer to this course as The Med-Surg Nursing comes as a challenge for most nursing students, even for those intending to become medical-surgical nurses. Some may find themselves needing to re-ignite the course. When analyzing, select all questions, you never select all options in Select All. This may seem like a given, but there are times when all the options may seem correct. So, after you have learned all of the above-mentioned information in your nursing course, you are ready to apply the content to the questions you may see in your Med/Surg course. Here are some approaches you can take to answer these questions successfully: Understanding the Normal and Abnormal Anatomy for the Disease/Condition Question in No. So how do you keep your head afloat with all this information you learn?
